Synopsis

Synopsis of presentation: The significance of Sarawak's architecture and settlements has been established in many fields of study such as history, political science, anthropology, economics and geography. However, to date, the architectural history of the state has been largely under-represented by Malaysian architectural historiography, and is not included in architectural history courses in architectural programs locally or overseas. In 2009, PAMSC initiated a research program to begin to address this gap, by commissioning John Ting to write a history of architecture in Sarawak. The book (now close to completion), critically analyses the architecture and settlement patterns of Sarawak from James Brooke's first visit until Malaysia was formed, and has four main chapters. This presentation previews this upcoming book.

Speakers' Biography

In addition to completing a PhD in Architectural History, Ar. John Ting has a Bachelor of Architecture from RMIT University and is a Registered Architect in Australia. He has also lectured in tropical design, construction technology and Southeast Asian architectural history at Australian architectural programs. He practices in Melbourne and is currently the consulting architectural historian on the Old Sarawak Museum Conservation project.
